

Deloitte Luxembourg and Inspirient to Offer AI Solutions to Management Companies

Luxembourg / Berlin, 16 November 2021 – Deloitte Luxembourg’s ManCoTech proposal intelligently blends solutions and technologies to help European management companies (ManCos) transition to a more digital business model. Today, Berlin-based Inspirient GmbH, working in the data, technology and artificial intelligence (AI) arena, has been integrated into Deloitte Luxembourg’s portfolio, deepening its range of advisory, consulting and integration services.

Deloitte’s ManCoTech initiative enables open technology environments that integrate legacy systems and third-party solutions, allowing ManCos to run their businesses in an efficient and coordinated way. The innovative algorithms of Inspirient’s AI solutions help strengthen ManCos’ risk control frameworks by enhancing their level of control over fund prices. This allows ManCos to detect anomalies in fund valuations more effectively and rapidly, reducing the risk of associated costs and potential reputational damage.

Dr. Georg Wittenburg, founder and managing director of Inspirient GmbH, said:

“Sound, data-driven decision-making is the bedrock of investment and asset management companies. Data evaluation and analytics must now keep pace with the wealth of available data in order to use it efficiently, effectively and to deliver value. For investment management companies in particular, failure to maintain the most reliable data and valuations results in suboptimal investment decisions and increased regulatory risk. We are excited to drive digital innovation in this space with Deloitte Luxembourg.”

François-Kim Hugé, Partner at Deloitte Luxembourg, highlights the need for ManCos to leverage the power of technology to tackle growing competition and ever-changing regulations, stating that:

“Today, ManCos manage trillions in assets under management and millions of investors, and many with rather old-fashioned, manual software — an unsustainable approach for the investment management industry. The future success of ManCos is inevitably bound to the rise of new technology solutions, which will allow them to effectively and efficiently execute their core activities.”
